No one knows for sure if Phil Keaggy was really Jimi Hendrix's favorite guitar players, but for decades, legend has had it that Hendrix once said that. There's no written record of it, so it can't be proven. But just the fact that people who have heard Keaggy were always willing to believe it shows just how good Keaggy and his group Glass Harp were - and still are.

Glass Harp recorded three albums for Decca Records, plus a live concert, recorded at Carnegie Hall, in the early 1970s, and split up in 1973. But the group has reunited a few times, selling out venues to its devoted following.

Glass Harp - Phil Keaggy, bassist Dan Pecchio and drummer John Sferra will reunite once more, on Saturday, November 1, 2008, this time as a fund-raiser for the non-profit music and education organization Roots of American Music.

This historic concert will take place at the Beachland Ballroom, as part of a benefit evening that will also feature a silent auction of many music-related items; and a VIP party in the Beachland Tavern, with a buffet dinner and live jazz music.

Seating for this event is extremely limited. Tickets for the Glass Harp concert, only, are $50. VIP tickets, which include the concert, are $125 ($75 tax-deductible). For tickets or for corporate sponsorship information, call 216.321.9353.

ABOUT ROOTS OF AMERICAN MUSIC

Roots of American Music (ROAM) uses blues, folk, jazz and other forms of American roots music as a teaching medium to improve learning comprehension and retention among children in primary and secondary education in Northeast Ohio.

Through lyric and song, ROAM helps children more vividly imagine life during a specific period of history or time of social change. The experience enriches the learning process by making the lessons both relevant and memorable. In addition, it evokes a deeper understanding of the generations, races and ethnic groups responsible for our diverse American Heritage. ROAM provides both residency and assembly programs in schools on a variety of topics and performs annually for more than 40,000 children.
